Nurse Led Late-Effects Telephone Follow Up Clinic

Information for Patients

Why a Late-Effects follow up clinic?

We know that the treatment you received for cancer can sometimes cause problems. Through monitoring and screening we can reduce the number and severity of these.

Potential late effects following treatment for cancer include effects on:

- Fertility.
- Pituitary gland, thyroid and other endocrine disorders.
- Heart, lung and kidney complications.
- Psychological, social and quality of life issues.

What is a telephone-based follow up clinic?

Many patients no longer need to attend the Late Effects clinic in person. However, there are benefits in having their health monitored. A telephone clinic will allow us to assess your general health, address any issues you may have and check your blood results without you having to visit the hospital. Usually, your appointment will be once per year.

What will happen when you telephone me?

A specialist nurse will discuss your general health with you and any problems you may be having. The consultation will be similar to the face-to-face consultation that would take place at clinic.

You will be told the results of your blood tests and any action required will be fully discussed.

What if I forget to tell you something?

You can always contact us directly on phone numbers provided or via your GP.

What if I can't make my appointment time?

It is important to remember that the telephone appointment is just the same as a normal clinic appointment. You should be available at your appointment time. If not, then please contact the hospital on the number at the top of your letter and arrange a new appointment.

What if I miss an appointment?

Please contact the hospital and arrange another appointment.

What if my contact details are wrong?

Please contact the hospital with your correct details.

What happens if I no longer have a telephone?

Please write to the hospital at the address at the top of the letter. We will then make arrangements for you to be seen.

What happens after the telephone consultation?

If all is well, you will be sent a letter with the date and time of your next telephone consultation. The letter will also contain a list of blood tests required prior to your appointment.

You, your GP and your referring hospital (if applicable) will be sent a copy of your telephone consultation.

How do I get blood tests done?

You should have your blood tests taken approximately 2 weeks before your telephone appointment. You can have this carried out at your GP Surgery.
